

The Accrediting Council on Education in Journalism and Mass Communications (ACEJMC) reviewed 25 programs at its May 6-7, 2016, meeting in Chicago.

Initial accreditation:

College of Communication at the University of Sharjah in the United Arab Emirates
School of Communication, Journalism and Marketing at Massey University in New Zealand; both the undergraduate and professional master's programs.

Provisional accreditation:

Nido R. Qubein School of Communication, High Point University, received initial provisional accreditation.

Provisional reaccreditation -- undergraduate program:

Department of Journalism, University of Arkansas
Department of Journalism and Public Relations, Bowling Green State University
Department of Journalism and Mass Communication, North Carolina A&T State University
Department of Journalism, Texas Christian University

Reaccreditation of undergraduate program:

Department of Journalism, Ball State University
School of Communications, Howard University
School of Journalism and Broadcasting, Western Kentucky University
Department of Journalism and Public Relations, California State University, Chico
Department of Journalism, California State University, Northridge
Greenlee School of Journalism and Communication, Iowa State University
Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, Murray State University School of Mass Communication and Journalism, University of Southern Mississippi
Faculty of Communication, Catholic University in Santiago, Chile
Department of Journalism, University of Wisconsin Oshkosh
College of Media, West Virginia University
Department of Journalism and Communication, University of Alaska Anchorage

Reaccreditation of undergraduate and professional master's program:

S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications, Syracuse University
Manship School of Mass Communication, Louisiana State University College of Communication and Information Sciences, University of Alabama
Philip Merrill College of Journalism, University of Maryland
Frank W. and Sue May born School of Journalism, University of North Texas Department of Journalism and Media Studies, University of South Florida, St. Petersburg.